Lost Again: A Novel in Stories

- Author
- Set between post-Woodstock 1969 and the eve of the American Bicentennial in December 1975, Lost Again is coming-of-age fiction about the interconnected lives of fervent college kids whose idealism splinters into confusion and disillusionment when they encounter the revolutionary promise of the 1960s in its quick decline.
- Coming soon in eBook and POD formats on Amazon.com

Stages of Irish Identity

- Author
- This book-length critical study examines and evaluates the theatrical construct of Irish identity through a consideration of productions, playwrights, and performers that have provided templates for American, Irish, and British society to (mis)understand Irish ethnicity.
- Goal for completion: January 2019

Posing with a portrait of Brian Friel at the Abbey Theatre, Dublin, 2016.

Have A Seat

- Founder, Supervisor, Principal Contact
- This campaign offers donors the opportunity to name a seat in the new Weiss Theater, which is the Theater Department's principal performance space.
- Any funds raised through this endeavor will create and sustain an endowment fund for the Weiss Theater that will be managed solely by Lafayette's Theater Department.
- To read more about the Have-A-Seat initiative and how you can contribute, visit Lafayette Theater Department's website:

A Tree for Easton

- Playwright
- Research underway to develop a play centered on the controversy that arose when Easton, PA officially claimed to be the site of the first Christmas tree in America.
- World premier production scheduled for November 2019 in Easton, PA

An All-Green Theater

- Explorer and Researcher
- After being involved in the planning and building of Buck Hall and the Weiss Theater at Lafayette College, I continue to investigate funding sources that will support an initiative to make the theater facilities and theater production adhere to sustainability and environmentally sound practices.
- The goal is also a challenge: Create the very first all-green theater facility and operation on the planet.
